Blaydon on Tyne
A Sailors Song

Four miles up the water from Newcastle Quay,
Where the river winds most out of line, man,
There stands a bit village, so dear unto me,
That village is Blaydon on Tyne, man.

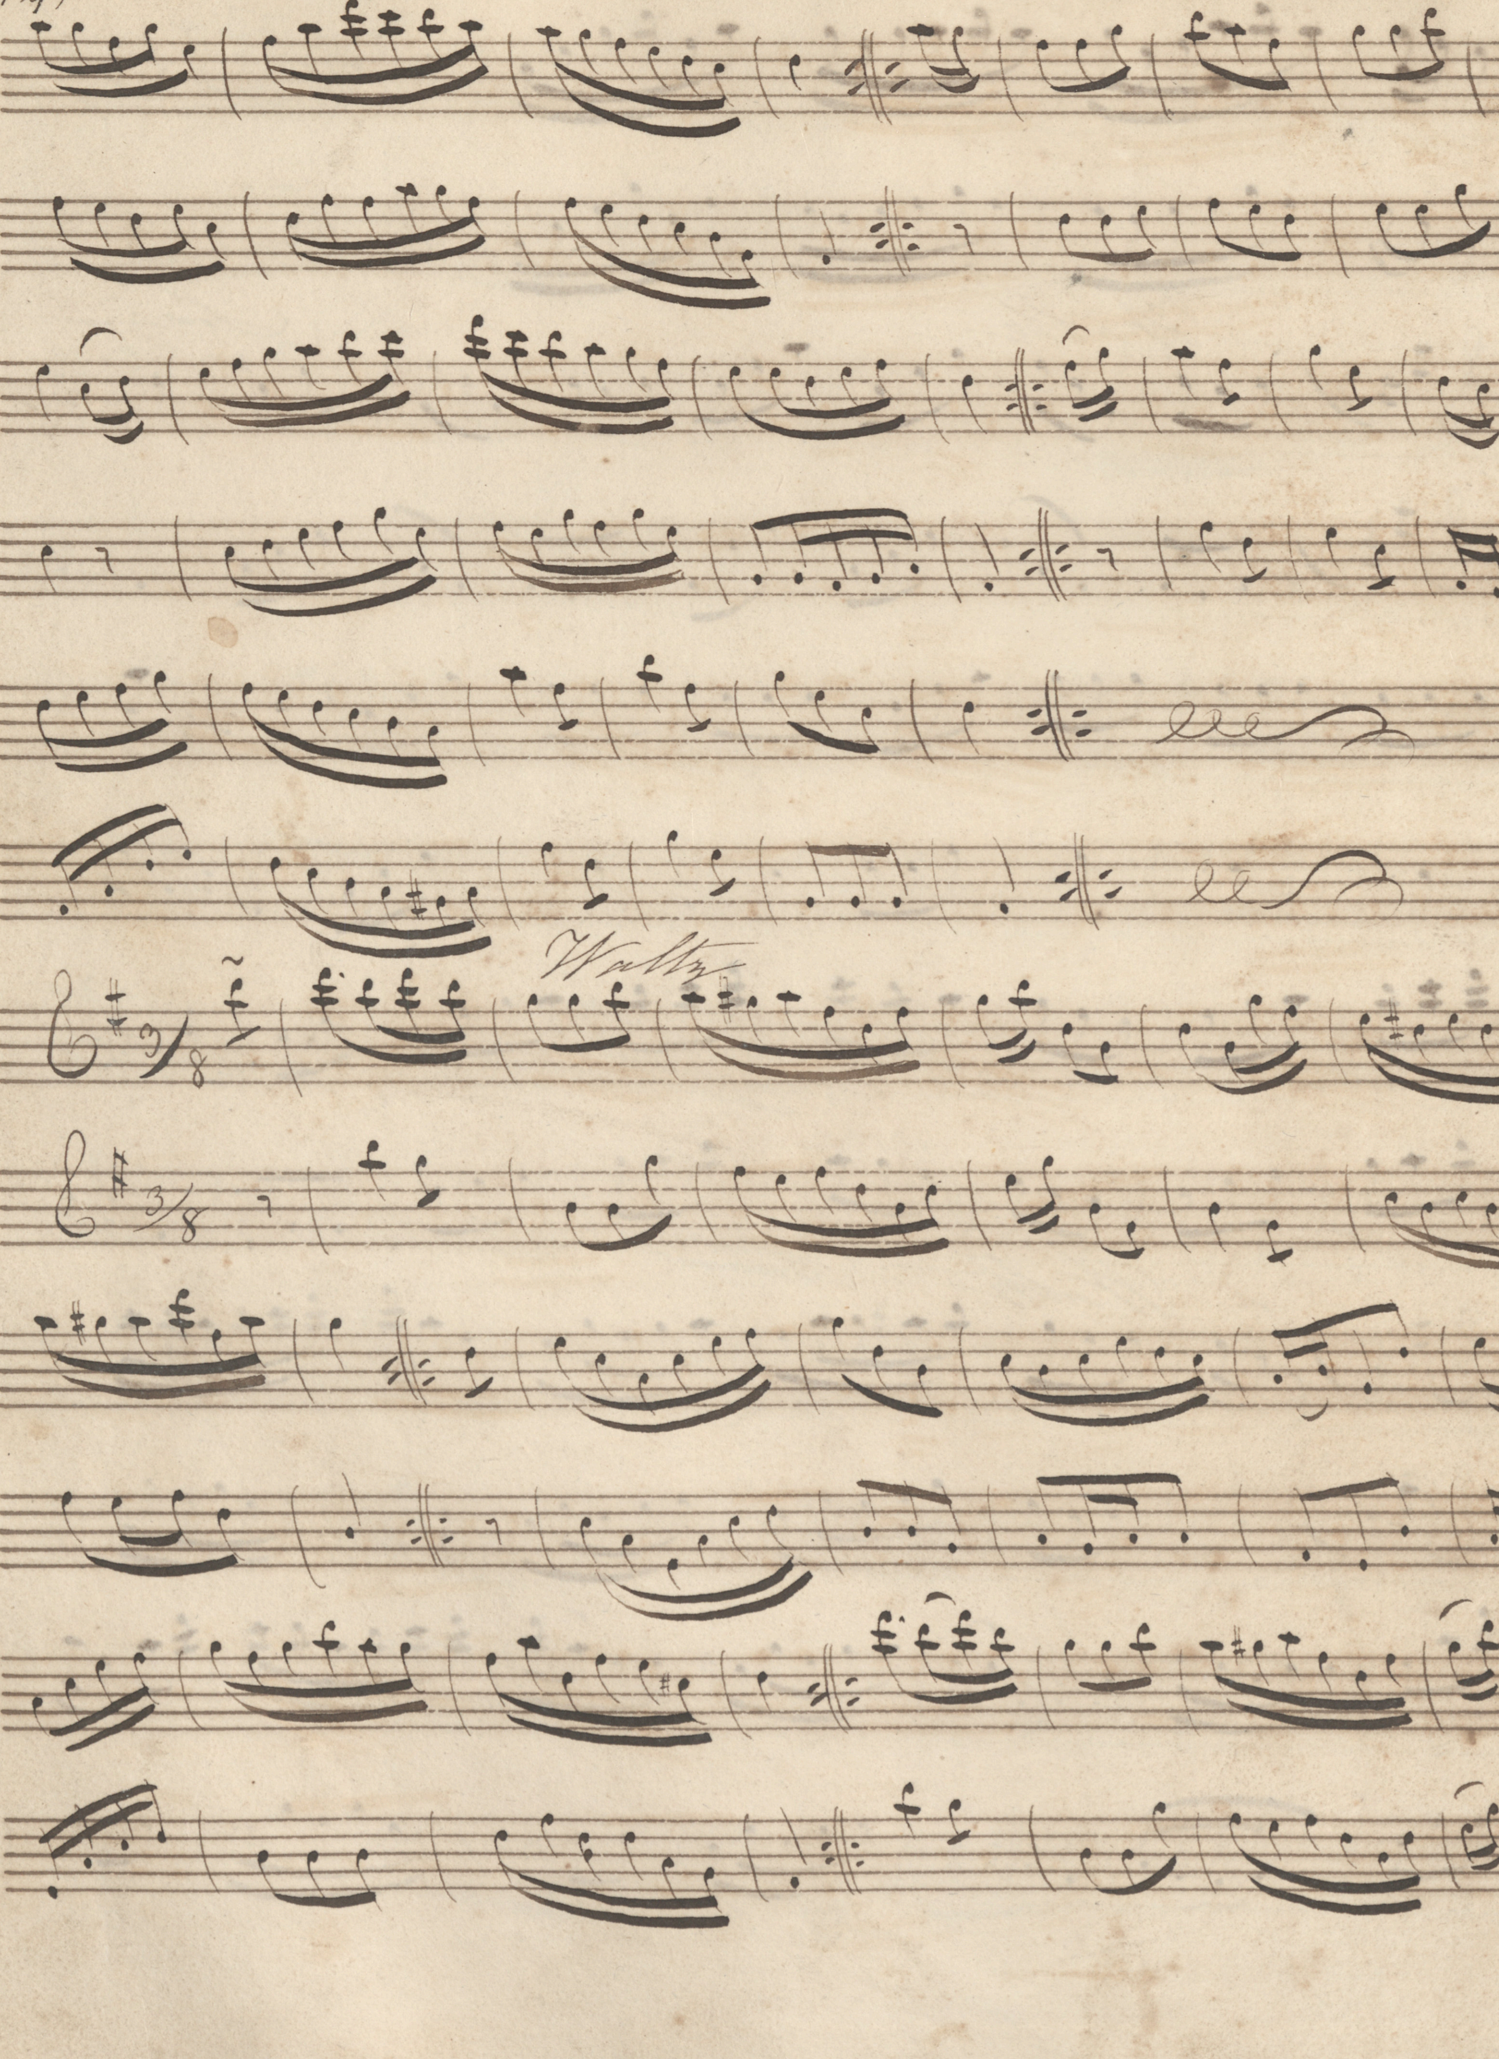
Though lowly, ah! little it matters to me;
Its sunshine,– its shadows are mine, man,
And often I dream, when I'm far out at sea,
That I'm anchored at Blaydon on Tyne, man,

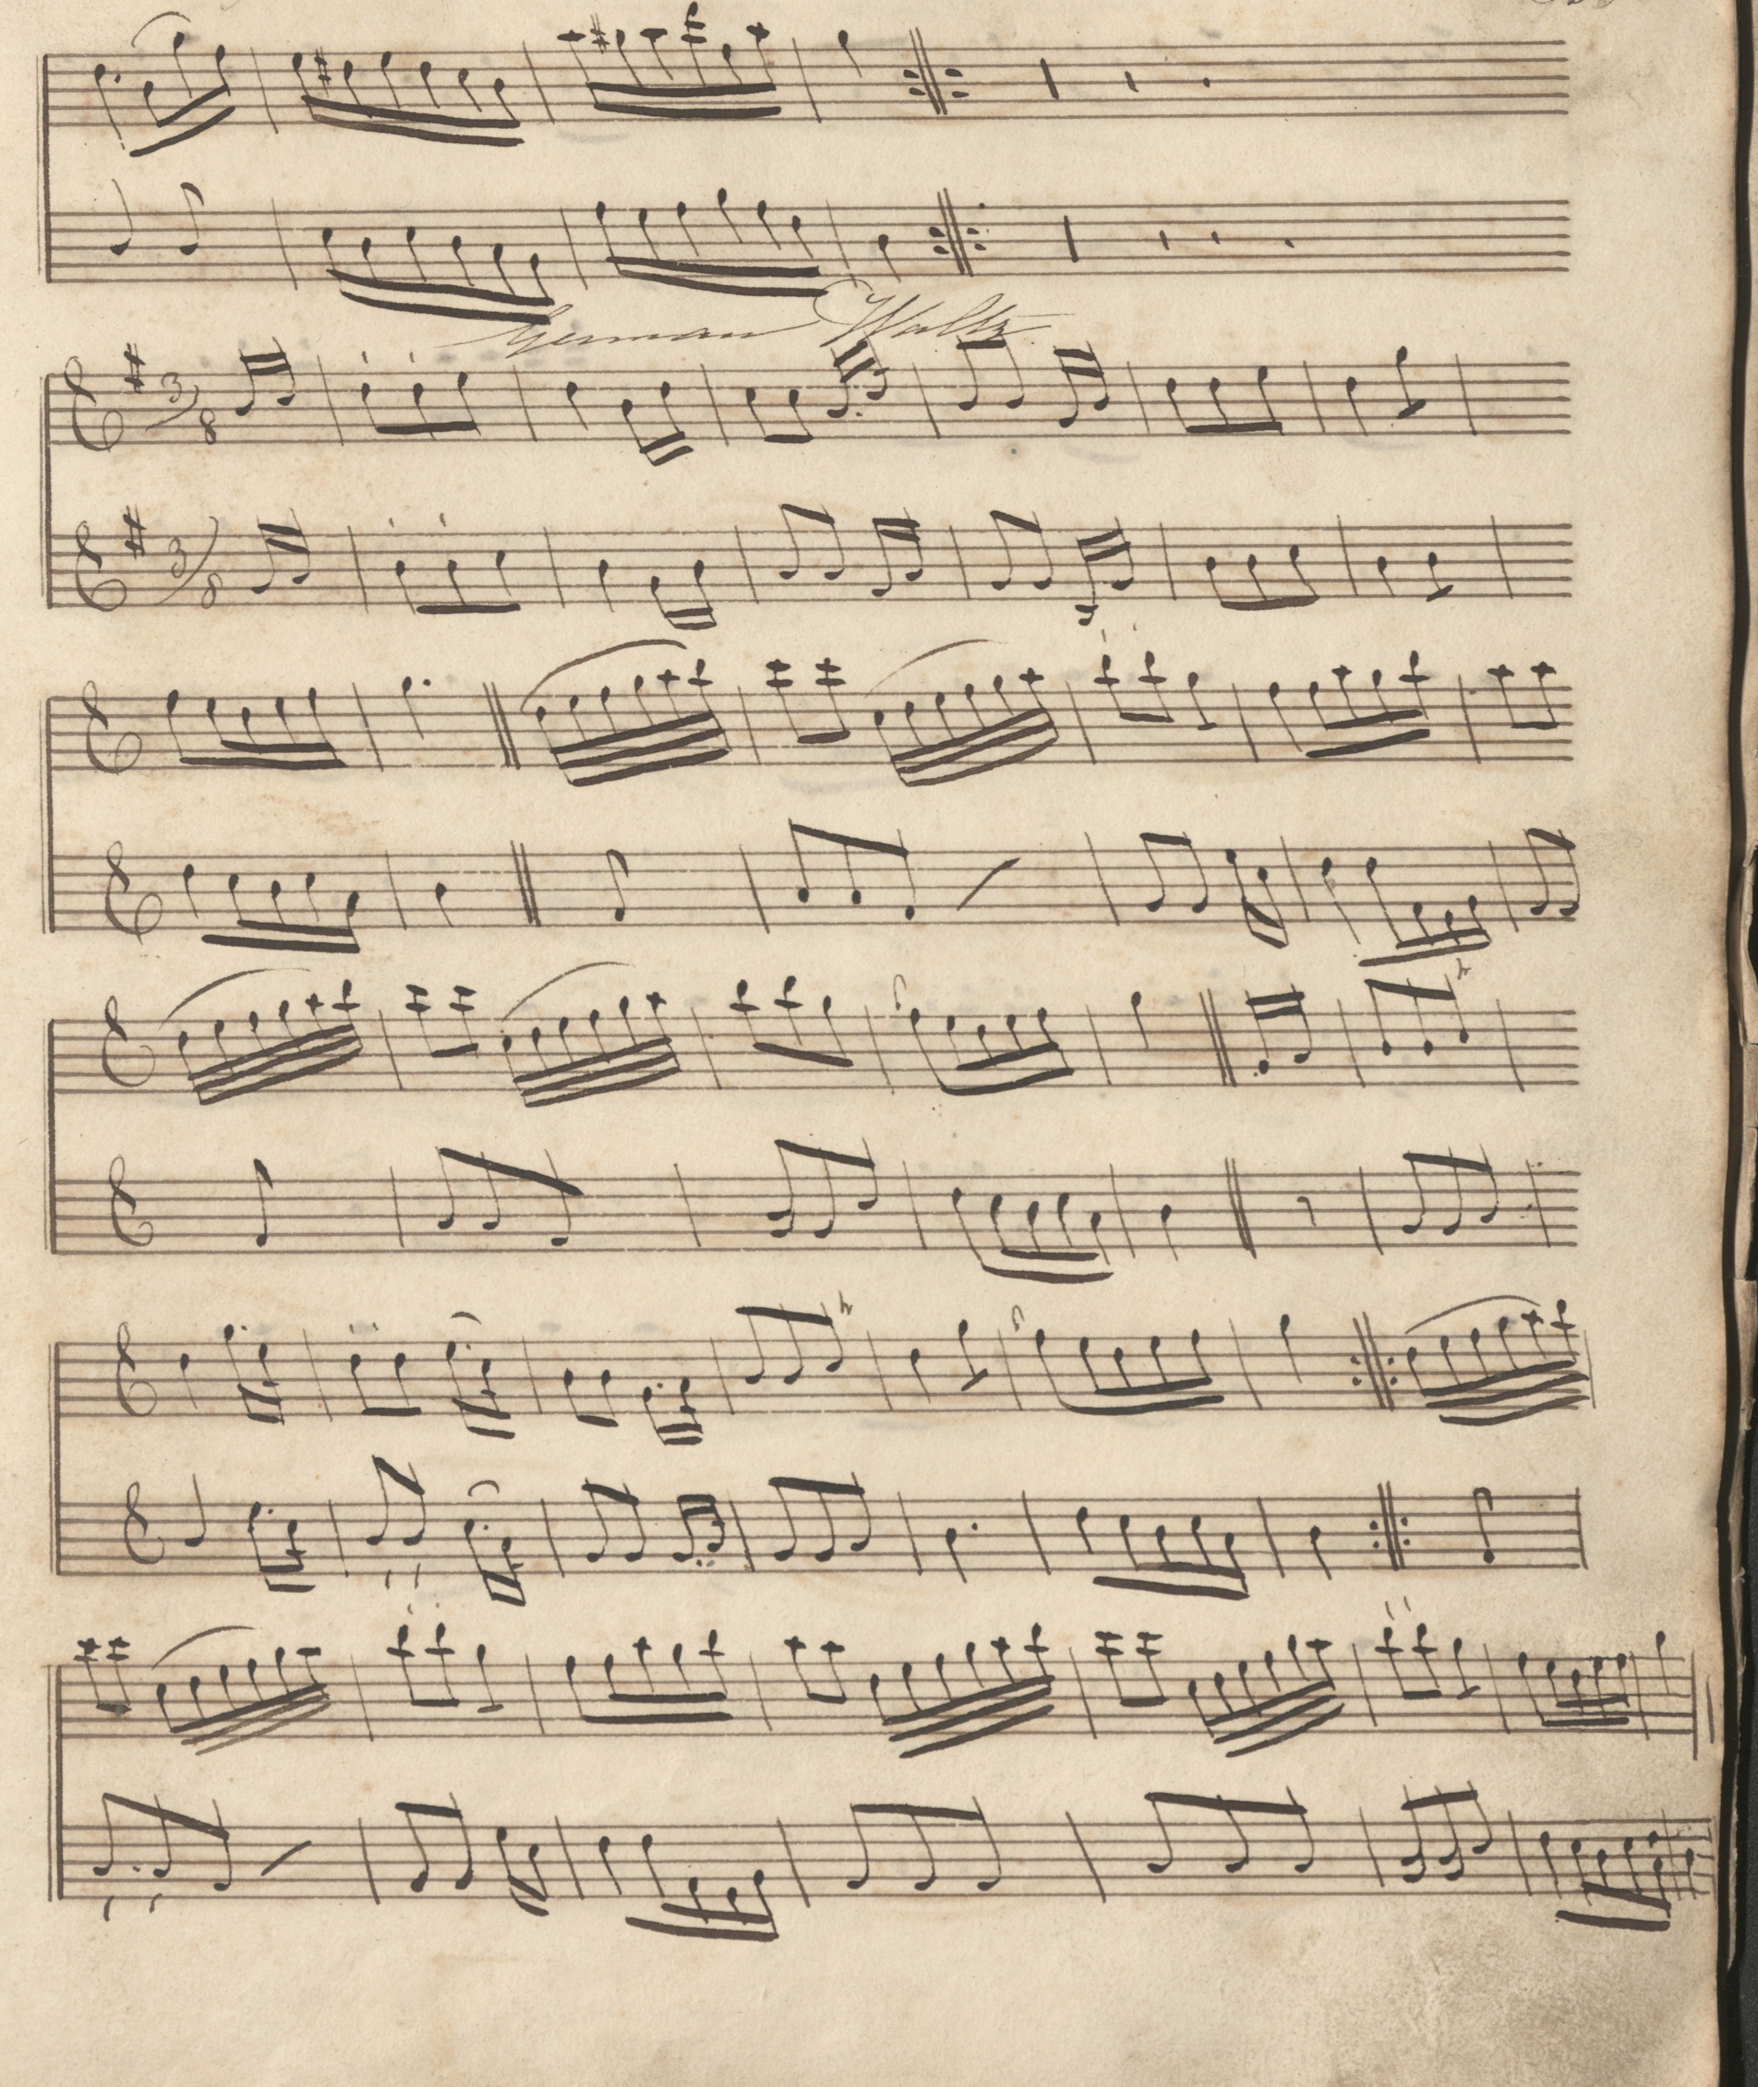
I've wandered afar, o'er this beautiful earth,
Where the sun seldom ceases to shine, man.
But my heart ever yearns for the land of my birth
But most of all, Blaydon on Tyne, man

When homeward, returning from over the sea,
No heart beats so gaily as mine, man,
For I know there's a welcome awaiting for me
From a loved one at Blaydon on Tyne man

And who does not think of the fair scenes of home,
With feelings no word can define, man,
Ah! that is the reason, where'er I may roam
That my heart clings to Blaydon on Tyne, man,

There's something so pleasing to me in the name
For it's linked to the days of "Lang Syne", man,
And did you but know them, you wouldn't could blame
My love for Old Blaydon on Tyne, man





Cease your Funning
